EXCLUSIVE INTERVIEW

With Nikolay Yakovlev

Tell us about the development process that culminated in the artist you are today.

My life has developed in such a way that by the age of 25 I didn't quite understand who I wanted to be. I was constantly trying to find some new opportunities, new solutions. Through introspection, I discovered a rather large background in myself: my technical skills, the way I analyze color, light. This gave me an idea to study retouching. Faced with retouching, I realized that the images offered by customers did not fit my ideals. I thought about the need to create something by myself.

Who I am now is my experience in the activity of a photo retoucher, my technical background and knowledge of photography, the operation of the camera, sensors, processors. I am a photographer thanks to this knowledge. I grew out of being a retoucher because I didn't like what I was given to process and I wanted to do my own art.

What's been the biggest highlight in your career so far?

In fact, at this particular period it is a very difficult question for me, because it seems to me that bright moments ... are yet to happen. Now the most important thing is work that goes on every day: on my projects, on improving myself as a photographer, as a retoucher, as a person who wants to achieve great heights. An important and, one might say, defining, for me was a master class from a pretty good Russian photographer. From this course I got great and important acquaintances, including with the photographer who led it. We began to communicate well, he helped me a lot in many of my projects. And the models that I managed to work with there later helped with the development of my creative skill.

I made my project with one of those models, which allowed us to create a team. Now this team has a photographer, that is me, the creative director, stylist, make-up artist. All the connections that we have, we use in creating a client base, in shootings, in working with brands.

Who were your biggest influences?

As a child, I lived in a place in Russia that was the most difficult to access in winter. I lived on a small island in the Karelia Republic, where communication with the mainland was carried out with the help of ships, and in winter - with the help of a helicopter, although quite rarely.

One cold February evening, my father brought me a camera. It was a small digital camera. I don't remember the model now, but I can say that I spent the next 7 years with this camera. I did not let go of it. I photographed every sunset, every person I met, kittens, architecture and so on. That is, literally everything that I could capture on this small island shrouded in ice. Therefore, I am sure that my father had the greatest influence on me.

What do you think is the hardest thing in your life you've ever had to overcome?

If you take only the photography side, then the most difficult periods for me are failures in creativity. This is not what is called a creative crisis. Because if you constantly do something, it will never happen to you. Rather, it is a serious discrepancy between shooting expectations and reality. The most difficult period for me was quite recently, when our whole team was preparing to shoot in New Year's style. I didn't fully understand what we wanted to get. At the time of the shooting, the makeup artists, stylists, and models constantly tried to push their ideas and there was no understanding between them. I couldn't put it all together correctly, and as a result, the photos came out very bad. It was a painful moment for me. I was sure that with my skill level it was unforgivable for me to shoot so badly, I could not let it happen. And in terms of creativity, it really touched me.

Well, in life, the most difficult moment was when my father became seriously ill and at the age of 14 I was practically left without parents. I was left alone and my goal was to try to survive and become a good person, a good photographer. Unfortunately, as a result of this, for a long time I had to do not my favorite thing, I had to earn money in ways that are quite far from photography. To start all over again, oddly enough, my childhood helped me again. When I moved to the city and was able to improve my life, a person who knew me from a very young age helped me to get back on my path and shared my love for photography. This person reminded me of my goal and supported me in every way so that I would not give up and change my life for the better. And I am very glad that now I was able to return and I have at least this - something small, but what I like.

If you could say one thing to someone younger who looks up to you, what would you say?

I would advise him never to be afraid of failure. Constantly try to create something new and always learn. Analyze your mistakes. They will always happen. If a mistake laces over you, then you will not become the professional you want. One advice here - learn from your mistakes.

What are the biggest challenges of working during this pandemic?

As I mentioned, I live in Russia. For us, the word pandemic has a slightly different meaning than in Europe or North America. There were great difficulties at the very beginning - not to leave the house, a complete lack of orders and the opportunity to work. Therefore, the question of finance came to the fore - it was impossible to receive a single paid order at first.

There was nowhere to wait for financial help. However, this was a big benefit. I was able to learn a lot - I studied the techniques of light, deepened my knowledge in photography and image processing. I was also able to meet photographers from all over the world online of course. The most pleasant thing was to feel the support of the photographic community, it would seem, from completely unfamiliar people.

This situation made it possible to establish such contacts that, perhaps, I would have received only after 10 years of hard work.

How did you discover MALVIE and what do you like about the magazine?

I noticed this magazine on the Kavyar website. What I like about your magazine is that you allow young photographers to realize themselves. Through your publications, young photographers are encouraged to develop, move forward and do better. I think this is fundamentally important and immensely grateful for your support. I believe that professionals in our field notice the promising works in this magazine, which gives the potential opportunity for photographers to take part in major projects and take their creativity to the next level.

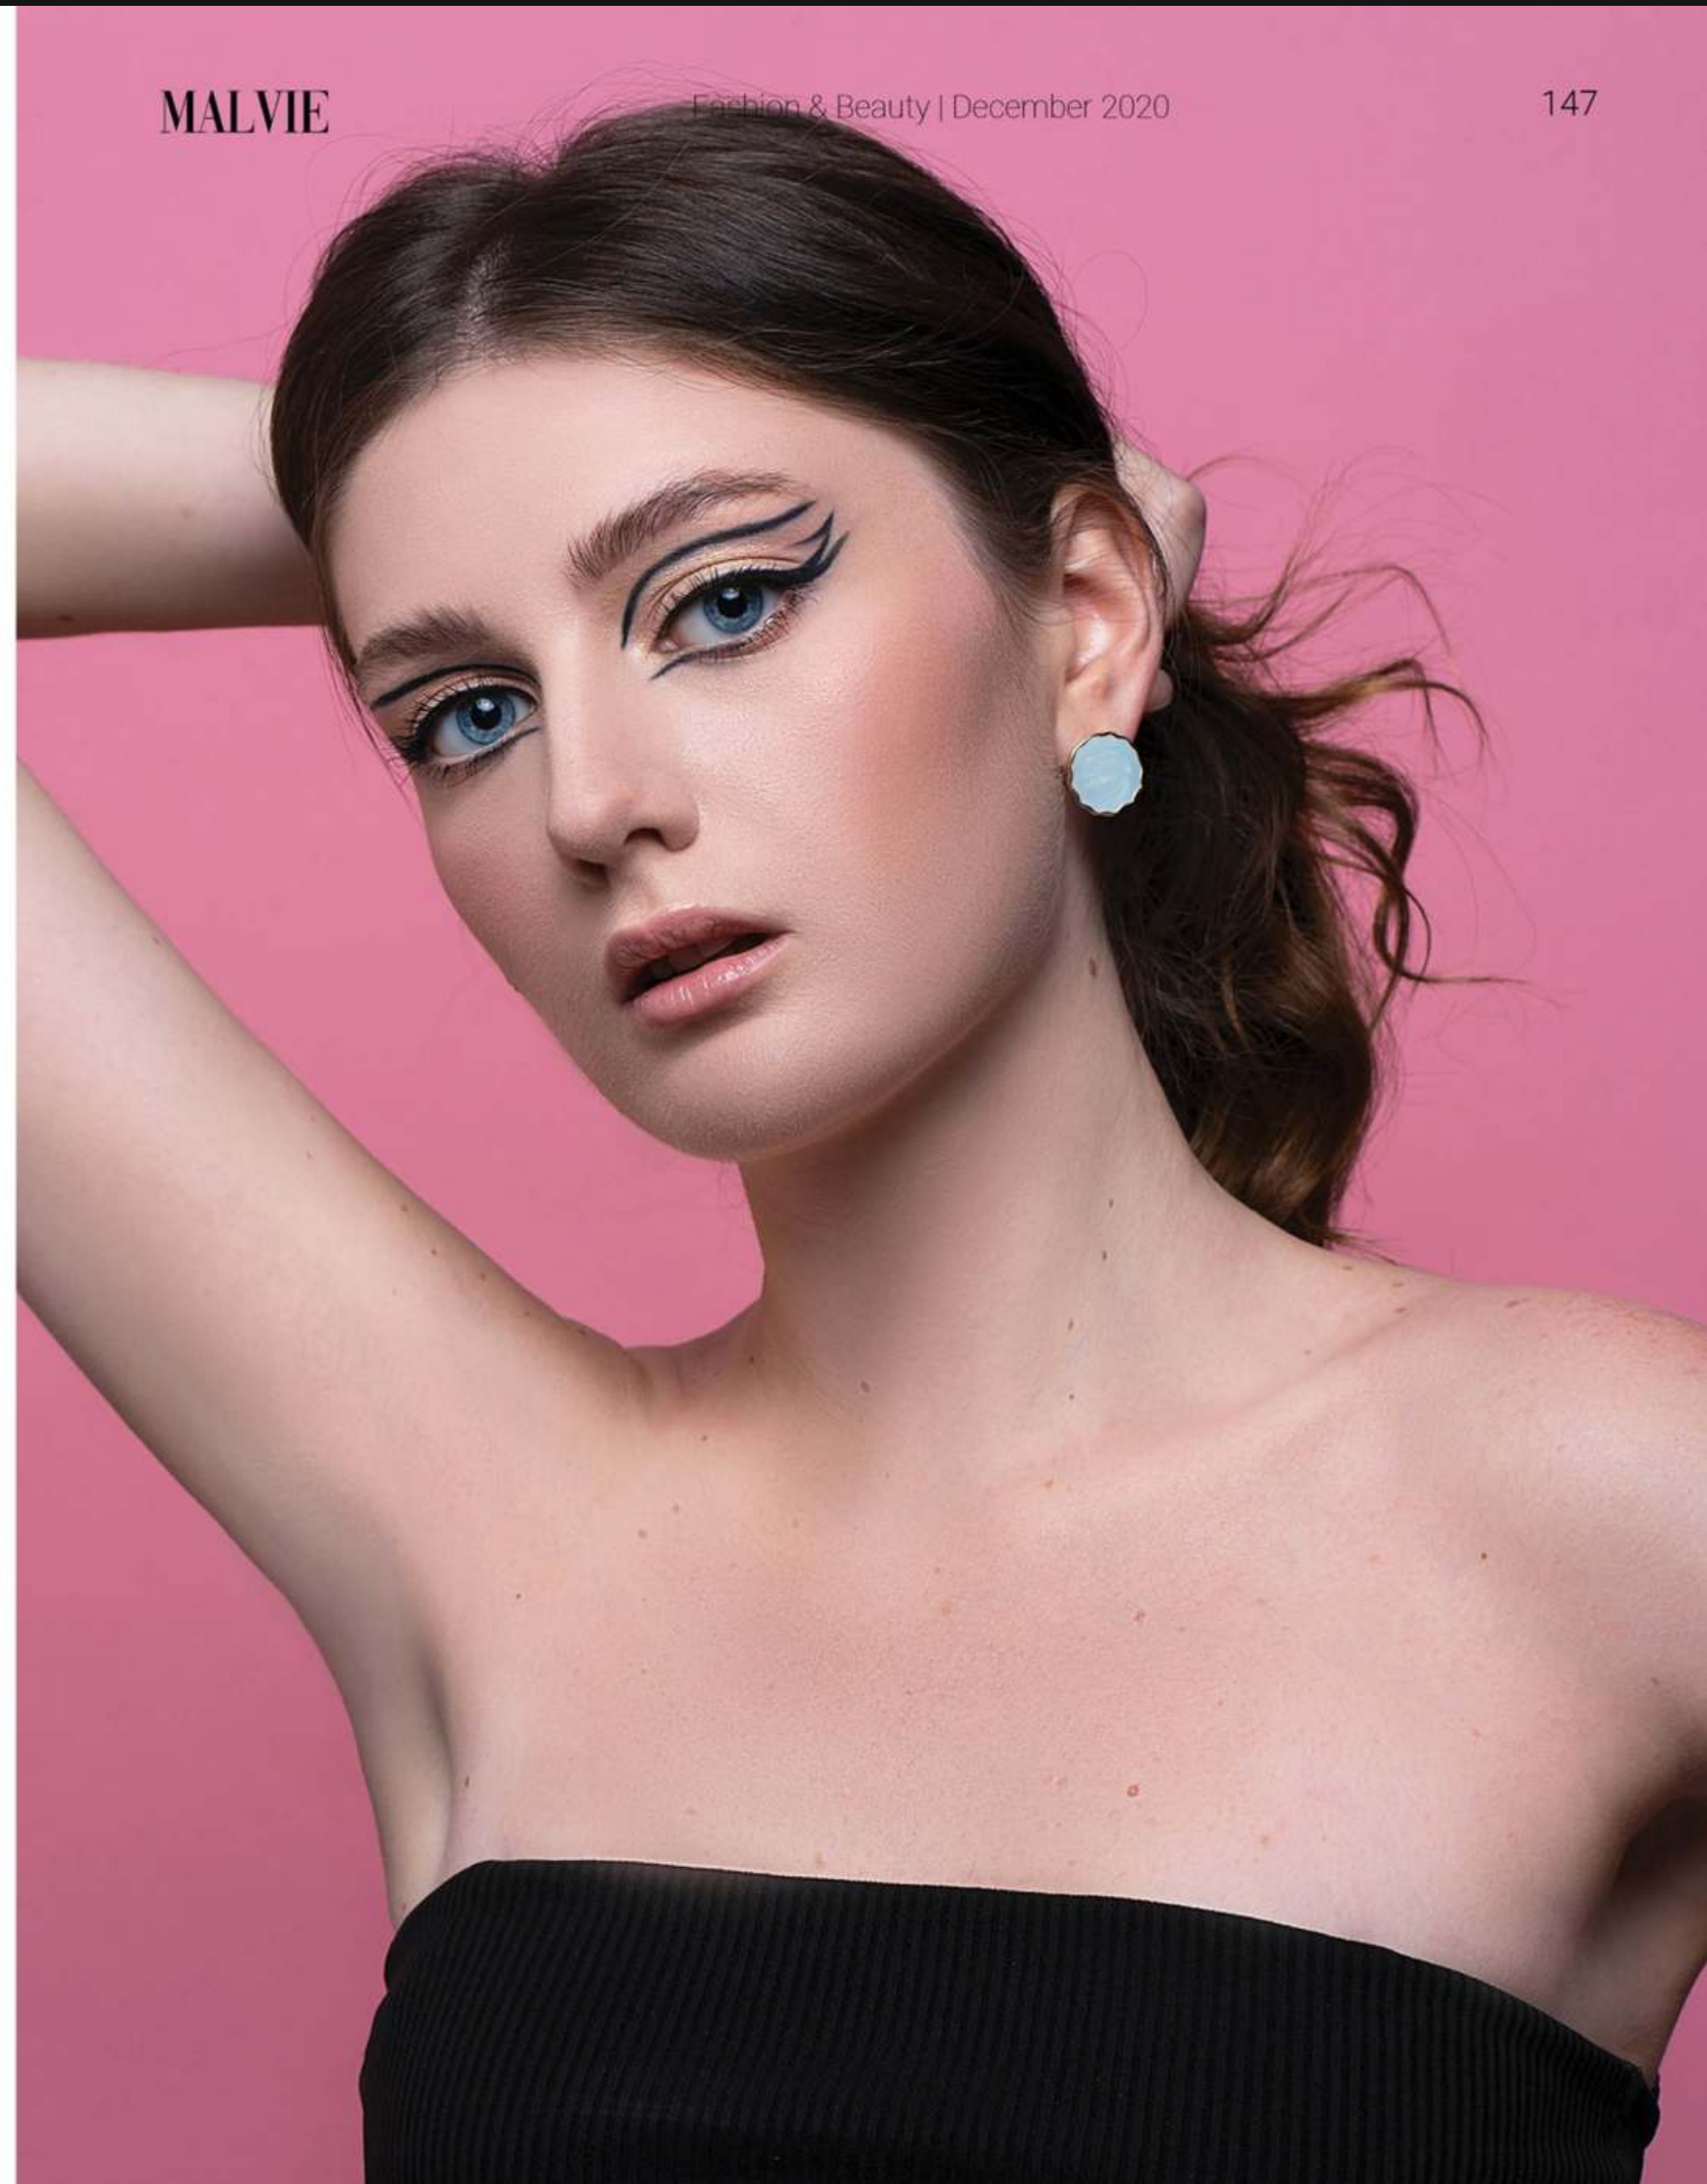

What is next for Nikolay Yakovlev?

I'll be brief here. The most important thing I dream of is that I would value my work and appreciate my efforts.
